

Honeywell

Printout

Honeywell Information Systems ■ Large Information Systems Division

Quackenboss receives 'best presentation' award

Harry Quackenboss, a senior product manager in Marketing (MSISD), recently received an award for the best technical presentation at a greater New York regional conference on databases for the ACM (Association for Computing Machinery). Harry and Oris Friesen in Multics Engineering jointly prepared the presentation on the "first implementation of a relational data base manager by a hardware vendor".

Harry, who gave the presentation, attributed his success to one simple fact: "I had the best product to present." Warren Martin, Multics Marketing manager added, "Harry's exceptional performance in this industry forum adds to Honeywell's image in general, contributes significantly to Multics' image of excellence and strengthens our overall Multics Marketing efforts."

John Adams, ACM director of operations, said, "Congratulations for a job well done. The overall quality of Vendor Presentations was extremely high and it is very much to your credit that you have been awarded this prize."

David W. Cleary, Sr., national branch manager in Westfield, New Jersey added: "We in the Communications Branch feel your opportunity to present Honeywell's Multics Relational Data Base at the Association for Computing Machinery Data Base seminar has had a significant and positive impact on the many customers and prospects in attendance. The fact that your presentation was selected as the best technical system from among the numerous vendor data base systems clearly points to the superior features inherent in the Multics Product and our high professional product marketing people.

Oris Friesen

"Speaking for myself and the rest of NOPS management, we are very proud to have sponsored this Honeywell presentation and look forward to reading Honeywell's free full page advertisement for Multics Relational Data Base 'Communications of the ACM'."

